SEMINARIES AT CORNELL.

Their Rise—Seminary Work in the Department of Political Science.

The seminary is not an old institution. It was first conceived of in Germany and was introduced into this country by President Charles Kendall Adams, of the University of Wisconsin, who was at that time professor in the University of Michigan and later President of Cornell. The first seminary organized at Cornell was the seminary of American History, which was started by Professor Tyler soon after his election to the chair of American History in 1881. It at once became popular with the students and increased their interest in all the work of the department. The seminary idea gradually permeated all departments of the University. There are at present, seminaries in archaeology, general philology, Latin, German, English philology, English literature, psychology, metaphysics, ethics, pedagogics, mediaeval history, American history, modern history, political and social institutions, and political economy. The same idea has been carried into the scientific and technical departments, which, although they have no organized seminaries, encourage original work on the part of their students.

Before the building of the present Library, the seminaries used a room in McGraw Hall. This, however, was soon outgrown, and in the new Library rooms were provided containing shelves for books, maps, photographs and collections of various kinds. The NEWS purposes to give its readers a description of the work done in some of the important seminaries, and presents this week a sketch of the seminaries in political science.

In the department of political science, the class composed entirely of graduate students in which the theses of candidates for advanced degrees are presented for suggestions and criticism, is called the graduate seminary. Two or three other advanced courses, however, are conducted on what are substantially the same lines, the work being of the nature of original investigation.

In the graduate seminary, it has been the custom for each candidate for an advanced degree, whose major is in the department, to select under the direction of the professors some subject for his thesis, and to carry on that work largely independently, under the immediate direction of one professor selected to take charge of it. Reports are made to that professor at irregular intervals as seems best to the parties concerned, suggestions and criticisms being made informally at any time. When some part of the thesis is in substantially finished form, so that it can be suggestive and helpful to the seminary as a whole, and when also it is desirable for the student concerned to receive more general criticism as regards the substance and form of presentation, a report is made in the full seminary. The meetings are entirely informal, the student reading the chapter from his thesis or presenting the report that he is to make, subject to interruption for questions and criticism by any of the professors in the seminary, or by any of his fellow students.

Aside from this critical work given individually to each candidate whose major work is in the department, it has been the custom to take up some special subject for investigation by the seminary as a whole on which reports are made from week to week. Two or three years ago certain fundamental concepts in social science, economics and politics, such as society, government, wealth, progress, etc., were considered. To each member of the seminary a topic was assigned some weeks in advance; and, after full study of the material in the Library, he made a summary of the differing opinions and of his conclusion to the seminary to form the basis of discussion and criticism.

During the present year the special topic for investigation has been China, the economic, social and political conditions being worked out as carefully as the material at hand permits, and reports made to the seminary. This coöperative plan of work has apparently succeeded in giving to the members of the seminary a far more comprehensive view of the general situation in the far East and a better basis for judgment of the political principles involved than it would have been possible for the individual members to have secured by separate work.

The classes in the development of economic theory and in advanced social science composed, one of them entirely, the other mainly, of graduate students, are conducted in similar fashion, the various topics under discussion being assigned to individual members of the seminary for critical investigation and report, this report then being criticised by the professor in charge of the course and by the other members of the class.

A similar method is followed by the class in political principles which consists also mostly of graduate students. Two important books on the subject have been reported on in parts by different members of the seminary and criticised to form the basis of more original work. The seminary, then, divided into four committees, after as complete a study as possible, is outlining the general topics which should form the basis of an original work on political principles. These different reports will be brought into the seminary compared and discussed until the seminary can agree upon a general outline of a book on political principles. The various topics in this outline will then be taken up in order, each topic being assigned to one member or to a small committee for careful preparation and report, and after detailed discussion, an attempt will be made to see how close an agreement can be reached upon these most important fundamental principles of the science.

In other advanced courses in the department, so far as possible, somewhat similar methods are followed; but in three of the cases mentioned, the meetings are sessions of two hours each, in order to give time for full discussion, and the attempt is made to have the work such that it will both train in methods of investigation, and will secure, so far as possible, original results.

HORACE WHITE, '87.

Sketch of a Prominent Cornell Graduate.

Horace White, '87, was re-elected to the New York State Senate from the thirty-sixth district at the recent election in Onondaga county. His election was more than a victory, since questionable methods had been used in the recent fight against him. Senator White is a son of Horace K. White, a well known resident of Syracuse, and a nephew of Andrew D. White, ex-president of Cornell and at present ambassador to Germany. He entered Cornell from the Syracuse high school with the class of '87, graduating with the degree of Bachelor of Laws with high honors. In his junior year at Cornell, Senator White won the memorial prize in declamation and the next year he took the Woodford prize in oratory. Since that time, he has had the reputation of a platform orator of exceptional ability, especially upon political questions, in which he has been most deeply interested.

After graduating from Cornell, Mr. White studied for two years in the law office of former Senator Hiscock at Syracuse, and followed that up by a course at the Columbia Law School. After his admission to the bar in May, 1890, he spent another year of study in the office of Senator Hiscock. Senator White formed a partnership with Harry F. King in 1891 which was continued until Mr. King's death in 1893, after which he formed another partnership with Jerome L. Cheney, which still continues with offices in the White Memorial building.

Senator White has been an active Republican since attaining his majority, and enjoys popularity to a marked degree, especially with the younger element of the Republican party. During his two terms in the Legislature, Senator White has served on many important committees. In the last term of the Legislature, he was appointed chairman of the committee on Public Education and a member of the committees on Cities, Codes, Canals, Revision, and Indian Affairs.

A museum of art and archaeology will be established at the University of California next year.

Cornell Heights.

Cornell Heights, the new residence section recently opened on the north side of Fall Creek gorge, is fast becoming a University settlement and many professors and alumni are either building or will do so in the near future. A suspension foot bridge has been erected over the gorge just back of the Chi Psi House which gives easy access to the Campus. Among those who have already erected houses are, Professor J. H. Tanner, of the mathematical department; Professor E. B. Titchener, of the department of psychology; E. G. Wyckoff, '88; J. L. Stone, '74, of the agricultural department, and R. G. Allen, head of the University weather bureau. Homes on the Heights are also occupied by Dr. A. T. Kerr, '95, head of the medical department; Dr. Wilhelm Miller, '97; Professor Olaf Brauner, of the College of Architecture, and Instructor C. W. Furlong.

A number of others have recently purchased lots with the intention of building in the near future. Among the purchasers are, Professor E. B. McGillivray, of the School of Philosophy; Professor C. A. Martin and Professor A. B. Trowbridge, '90, of the College of Architecture; Registrar D. F. Hoy, '91; Assistant Librarian Willard Austen; H. C. Howe, '93; Miss Mary Fowler, '82; Professor G. F. Atkinson, of the botanical department, and Professor J. W. Jenks, of the political economy department.

Service in Memory of Mr. Rose.

A service in memory of Mr. H. W. Rose, the late general secretary of the Cornell University Christian Association, will be held in Barnes Hall next Sunday afternoon, February 3, at 4 o'clock. President Schurman will speak on behalf of the University, and Dr. Charles Mellen Tyler will represent the Board of Trustees of the Christian Association. Harry Wade Hicks, '98, formerly general secretary of the Cornell Association, will deliver the memorial address.

Marshall Day.

Monday, February 4, will be observed by the College of Law, as Marshall Day, in honor of the memory of John Marshall, who played so important a part in the constitutional history of our country. The principal address will be delivered by Judge F. M. Finch, Dean of the College of Law, who will give a comprehensive review of Judge Marshall's life. Professor Moses Coit Tyler was to have taken part in the exercises, but when some time previous to his death it was evident that he would be unable to do this, the work was taken up by Professor Finch. The exercises will be held in the library lecture room, at 4:30 P. M. The public is cordially invited.

Fifty-seven per cent of the members of the Pennsylvania Freshman Law Class have previously attended college.

Rudolph C. Lehman, former coach of the Harvard crews, has become editor-in-chief of the London Daily News.

ENTHUSIASTIC MASS MEETING.*Four Thousand Dollars Raised for Athletics.

The mass meeting which had been called to consider the matter of raising funds for athletics was held in the Armory on Friday evening. Owing to the proximity of examinations and the inclemency of the weather only about one thousand students were present, but probably never before in the history of the University had there been held such a successful and enthusiastic student meeting.

President O'Malley of the Senior class presided and after the singing of Alma Mater, called upon E. R. Alexander, '01, secretary of the Athletic Council, to explain the present crisis. Mr. Alexander outlined the situation as follows: Heretofore there has been no definite policy pursued in raising money for athletics. Alumni as well as undergraduates have been called upon from time to time to defray the expenses of the various teams but the Athletic Council, at the suggestion of the alumni associations, has decided to adopt a new plan. Hereafter the alumni will be asked to subscribe only for permanent improvements and extraordinary expenses, such as sending a team abroad, while the undergraduates will be expected to furnish the funds for the teams. All subscriptions will henceforth go to a general athletic fund instead of to individual teams and will be divided as follows:—66 2-3 per cent to crew; 20 per cent to track and 13 1-3 per cent to baseball. But the change has brought about a situation which has not been unforeseen. More money is absolutely necessary if teams are to be put out in all branches this spring. The president of the Athletic Council, the graduate treasurer, and the managers of the four principal teams have after a careful estimate decided that $5900 is necessary to run athletics for the remainder of the year. Of this amount $4000 is for crew; $1000 for track, and $900 for baseball. This money must be raised or some branch of sport must be dropped.

After this statement by Mr. Alexander, R. H. Whitbeck, '01, appealed to the undergraduates to show true Cornell spirit and meet the serious situation resolutely. He was followed by W. J. Childs, '01, who urged the necessity of meeting the crisis.

A large chart was put on the stage, subscription blanks were distributed and the enthusiasm of the meeting was soon manifested. As fast as subscriptions came in, the amounts were chalked down on the chart. Within five minutes Arts had raised $250 and Sibley $200. In less than an hour almost $4000 had been either subscribed or paid in cash. Of this amount Sibley gave about $1400, Arts nearly $1000, and the different clubs of the University subscribed $500.

Before adjourning, the meeting considered the sending of delegates to take part in the Inaugural Parade at Washington. It was unanimously decided that no representation be sent to participate, and that student financial outlay at present should be concentrated on athletics. After singing the Evening Song, the mass meeting broke up.

It is still necessary to raise about $2000 and it is expected that those who did not attend the meeting will raise this amount. Blanks for subscriptions have been distributed with this purpose and it is urged that every one send in his subscription as soon as possible.

Athletic Finances at Yale.

In connection with the undergraduate movement at Cornell looking to some means of regular support of athletics, the recent action by Yale undergraduates will be of interest. At a University mass meeting held January 14, an assessment plan by which students will be called upon for a $7 annual subscription for athletics was voted a two-year trial.

The change from the old way of collecting money for the support of athletics was suggested by the Yale Faculty, because they believed the freshmen were carrying too much of the burden of athletic expense. An undergraduate committee was accordingly appointed and this committee, after careful investigation of expenses and receipts, reported that the assessment plan, which should cover all classes alike seemed to be the best. The amount decided upon was $7 per man.

The committee counts on 1,300 men, or one-half of the total number of students in Yale, paying $7 each for the support of athletics which will give about $9,000 as against $7,000 collected last year in the ordinary way. The $9,000 will be divided among the athletic associations as follows: Crew, $6,000; track team,

$1,800; tennis, $400; bicycle team, $375; gymnastic team, $325, and cross country team, $200. The hockey and basketball teams, it will be seen, are not included in this division, as they are self-supporting.

The new plan does not contemplate any surplus for permanent improvement, but will meet, merely, the running expenses of the various athletic associations when coupled with receipts from the various games and

Columbia Chess Team Selected.

The Columbia chess team to play Cornell at Ithaca February 20-21 has been chosen. It will consist of the four men who represented Columbia in the quadrangular tournament, viz., Sewall, Falk, Shroeder, and Keeler, with the addition of Von Sholly and Ridder, making in all a team of six men.

Civil Engineering Lecture.

The next lecturer before the College of Civil Engineering will be Colonel H. G. Prout, Chief Editor of the Railroad Gazette. Colonel Prout will lecture on "The Engineer on our Railroads," at 3 o'clock, February 8th, at the Physical lecture room. The faculty, professors and students are cordially invited to be present at Colonel Prout's lecture.

The women of the University held a meeting in Sage College last Thursday evening with the similar purpose of raising money for University athletics. Almost every woman in the University was present. Speeches were made by the four class presidents, Miss May, Miss Bentley, Miss Butler, and Miss Gilson, and by Miss Gilmore, '01; Miss Corse, '03, and Miss Crawford, '04. The speakers urged upon the audience the need of the athletic management for financial support and called upon each one present to do her part for the support of the teams. A subscription was then taken up and about $115 realized.

Fifteen men ran in the trials last Friday for the relay team, and the following six were chosen: Hastings, Bellingier, Lundell, Sears, Lawson and Warren. From this six the four to run at the Knickerbocker meet will be chosen. The track was covered with a thin film of ice and the times made were quite slow.

The catalogue of Yale University, just issued, reveals the presence of several Cornell graduates in various departments of that University. They include Tyiichi Kairiyama, '98, graduate student in philosophy; Cornelia Burton Trowbridge, '99, graduate student in biology; Elva Hulburd Young, LL.B. '98, graduate student in economics; John Pitt Deane, '90, graduate student in divinity.

More than one hundred thousand students are in attendance at the various colleges in the United States, in addition to more than fifty thousand in schools of medicine, theology, and law. This shows that one American in five hundred receives at least a part of a college education.

The first number of The Columbia Law Review, issued by the law department of Columbia University, has recently appeared.

Mr. Morris K. Jesup of New York City, whose library of Swedish literature was purchased last year by Harvard University, has given to Yale the collection of Arabic manuscripts gathered by the late Count Lundborg. The manuscripts date back to the twelfth century, and are valued at about $20,000.

Obituary.

JAMES P. O'TOOLE, '88, L.B.

James Patrick O'Toole was taken sick with pneumonia on January 11 and died in the afternoon of January 17.

He was born on a farm near Waterville, December 12, 1864, and was educated in the district school and in the Waterville high school. As a pupil he was very bright and early showed considerable literary talent. It was here that he did his first newspaper work as correspondent for the Utica Saturday Globe. In the fall of 1883 he went abroad and entered the seminary of Basse Wavre, Belgium, but after a short time he visited Paris and Great Britain and then returned home. He returned to Waterville and entered business, but in the fall entered Cornell. In college he was prominent on the college papers, and after graduating with the degree of Bachelor of Literature Mr. O'Toole went to Utica and became a reporter on the Utica Observer. In politics he was a Democrat and in 1890 he was promoted to fill the place of editorial writer on the Utica Observer and this place he retained until his death.

Mr. O'Toole was very popular in the wide circle of his friends, who mourn the loss of one of the brightest, most generous, and most friendly of their number, and prominent in Utica social life. He had long planned to take his parents and his sister to Utica to live, and he went to Waterville to help them dispose of some property so they could join him in Utica. It was there that he contracted the illness that led to his death.

WARREN LELAND, JR., '73, B.S.

Warren Leland, Jr., died recently at the Hotel Grenoble in New York after a long illness of Bright's disease. Mr. Leland was born in 1855 in New York. He had been in the hotel business all his life, as manager or proprietor, and had at various times owned or managed hotels in all parts of the country, and he was lessee and owner of the Grenoble Hotel at the time of his death. Though he was known to be very ill, his death will be a great shock to the many friends he has made.

The catalogue of the University of Illinois shows a registration of 2500 students.

Harvard and Princeton have made preparations to send large delegations to Washington on March 4, to attend President McKinley's inauguration.

MONEY FOR ATHLETICS.

The undergraduate mass meeting held in the Armory last Friday evening and reported elsewhere in this issue, was a sight which made glad the heart of every old grad. present. Any doubts as to whether the undergraduates would meet the plan of the Athletic Council, which provides that hereafter all running expenses for college teams shall be provided by undergraduates and that alumni shall be solicited for extraordinary expenses and permanent improvements only, were swept away within five minutes after the meeting was called together. Nearly a thousand students filled the hall and for an hour or more vied with one another in their practical devotion to Alma Mater. At the close of the meeting, nearly $4000 of the $5,900 needed had been subscribed, and the committee in charge felt that the remaining amount could be obtained from the students who were not present at the meeting. Such a beginning augurs well for the plan of out-and-out undergraduate support of athletics.

Now that the financial crisis of this year has been met, it would be wise, perhaps, to open up a discussion as to the permanent plans for raising money yearly. It is a question whether the mass meeting method would prove the best in the long run. Possibly the plan tried elsewhere of an organization with $5 or $10 membership fees which go entirely to athletics and in return bring to members free admission to athletic contests, might prove successful at Cornell. The suggestion is worth considering at any rate. Yale undergraduates have just adopted a plan of assessment whereby students agree to pay a stated amount, $7, each year, and the committee in charge expects subscriptions for this amount from half the student body. Possibly the solution at Cornell can be found along this line.

Whatever permanent plans are made, for the present the committee in charge of last Friday's mass meeting, and every student present at it deserve commendation for the way in which the financial problem of this year has been met.

READ THE REGISTER.

The alumni of the University take a commendable interest in Cornell publications. Thus much is evident from the prompt and abundant response to the editorial announcement in our issue of January 2 that a copy of the Register for 1900-1901 will be sent by return mail to everyone who asks. We wish to repeat this announcement now for the benefit of those who may not have noticed it before.

We wish in addition, however, to urge all Cornellians not merely to possess themselves of the Register, but to acquaint themselves faithfully with its encyclopædic contents. They will find a constant change. Entrance requirements are altered in scope and difficulty, old subjects cut off and new ones added, professors drop from the rolls, and new men taking their places change the work in their departments. And so in all fields there is continual change,—let us hope continual progress. If alumni are to remain in touch with Alma Mater, able to give information to their friends when it is needed, and possessed of a sympathetic understanding of present day policies, they must study the President's Reports and Registers which are sent them year by year. We believe they will find their reward.

The University of Pennsylvania will be represented in every branch of college athletics at the Pan-American Exposition.

Interclass Debates.

For the first time in several years, there will be a complete series of interclass debates this year. Last year the Curtis Club, representing the class of 1900, lost by default and the remaining clubs continued the contest.

This year besides the three underclass debates, there will be a contest between 1901 and 1902, the winner of which will debate the winner of the underclass series. Congress will then meet the successful class team.

The first of the underclass series was held January 17, and was won by the J. G. Schurman Club, 1903. The question debated was:—Resolved, That the enfranchisement of the negro at the close of the Civil war was hostile to the best interests of the nation. The next debate in the series is scheduled for February 20.

The clubs of the two upper classes have not yet reached an agreement as to the question to be debated.

President Schurman is in receipt of a communication from the Baltimore Association for the Promotion of the University Education of Women, offering a fellowship to the value of $500 for the year 1901 and 1902. The fellowship will be available for work at either American or foreign Universities and will be awarded to candidates who give promise of distinction in the subjects to which they devote themselves. Applications will be received by letter from eligible candidates and should be sent to Dr. Mary Sherwood, the Arundel, Baltimore, Md. A competitive examination will not be held but the bestowal of the fellowship will be based upon evidence of the candidate's ability and her prospect of success in her chosen line of study. It will consist of (a) her college diploma, (b) testimonials as to superior ability and high character from her professors, (c) satisfactory evidence of good health, (d) statement of work in which she proposes to engage subsequently, and (e) examples of her scientific or literary work in the form of papers or articles. The fellowship may in exceptional cases be held for two successive years by the same person.

As a result of the mass meeting held in the Library Hall on Dec. 18 to consider the "cribbing" question, a committee has been organized to devise ways and means of bringing the objectionable practices to an end. The members of the committee are: Senior Class, President O'Malley, M. M. Wyvell, B. R. Andrews, Warren Ogden, and J. S. Gay; Junior Class, President Francis, Ralph Kent, J. R. Patterson, and W. T. Moody; Sophomores, President Carlisle, G. H. Sabine, and Edward Burns, Jr.; Freshman Class, President Cooper and J. W. Johnson.

The committee has had several meetings, but as yet nothing has been decided on. Several plans are being considered, and a decision will be reached shortly.

George W. Grattan, of the class of 1901, has been obliged to leave the University on account of failure of his eyesight. For the past year Mr. Grattan's eyes have been failing and now he has gone to Buffalo to have an operation performed upon them.

Of Harvard's thousands of students only sixty-three men have the privilege of wearing the H. Sixteen of these are in football, fifteen in crew, twelve in baseball, and twenty in track.

SOLDIERS' FIELD AT HARVARD.

Sketch of an Interesting University Athletic Field.

Soldiers' Field at Harvard, says a writer in the Philadelphia Ledger, has an interesting history. It is made up of a hundred odd acres, which lie upon the south bank of the Charles River, from five to ten minutes' walk from the college. At present it looks like a dreary waste of meadow land, with no other improvements on it than a gridiron, surrounded by huge stands, a baseball grand stand of wooden construction, holding probably 400 people, and a brick locker building, containing dressing rooms, etc. It has not yet been fenced in, and on football days the streets leading up to the field are roped off, and people without tickets prevented from crowding around the various turnstile entrances.

The placidly flowing Charles River forms its left boundary. To the east it seems to stretch away almost to the spires of Boston, but then is suddenly stopped by a sharp bend in the river. To the west, far away across the salt marshes, one can see the old gables and elms of the Longfellow estate. The poet's study looked out directly on this vast field, and they say that in the late afternoon he was wont to sit in his windows and watch the gilded river, bright in the rays of the setting sun. Then the shadows would come creeping up across the meadows, and far away the lights of Boston would begin to twinkle in the growing twilight.

So fond did Longfellow become of this quiet bit of landscape that he bought a great part of the fields stretching away in front of his study window, and when he died he left his written wish that never should the river winding meadows be sold to any one who would put upon them unsightly buildings to hide the running river and quiet meads. He would, no doubt, have rejoiced had he known that the fields would in after years be gay with the sight of the Harvard students in the midst of their sports.

Gradually, as athletics grew at Harvard, the University felt the need of a larger field than the old one she had been using, and the pleasure of supplying this need was reserved for the generosity of Major Henry L. Higginson, of the class of 1855, and one of Boston's most eminent citizens. He purchased the meadows, and offered them to the University, the only request accompanying the gift being that the new athletic field be called "Soldiers' Field," as a memorial to six of his college comrades who fell in the Civil War. The six comrades to whose memory the field is dedicated were James Savage, Jr., Charles Russell Lowell, Edward Barry Dalton, Stephen George Perkins, James Jackson Lowell, and Robert Gould Shaw.

Major Higginson formally presented the new field to the University at a mass meeting held about five or six years ago. James Russell Lowell was then living, and he proposed as the inscription for the memorial tablet which marks the field, Emerson's verse:

"Though love repine and reason chafe,
There comes a voice without reply:
'Tis man's perdition to be safe
When for the truth he ought to die."

In due time Soldier's Field is to be made one of the greatest athletic ovals in the world. The first installment of money collected—and it amounted to many thousands of dollars—had to be spent in draining and filling up the ground, which work has not yet been fully completed. The next installment will go towards erecting a substantial and ornamental stone wall around the big field, after which a permanent football gridiron, with permanent stands, a permanent baseball diamond, with permanent stands; tennis courts, a cricket crease, quarter mile running tracks, both oval and straight, etc., will be laid out. Thus will the various branches of sport have separate fields with separate stands, all on the same field, or at least in the same enclosure. The crews will also have their quarters in permanent boat houses erected on the banks of the Charles river. It will take years, probably a quarter of a century, to make all these improvements, but when completed Harvard will have the greatest athletic field of any college in the world, and one which will supply her needs in this respect for several centuries, at least.

California Summer Session.

The University of California has engaged six scholars of wide reputation, all professors in Eastern Universities, for the faculty of its next summer session, in July and August, 1901. The men who will come to California from other institutions will be James E. Russell, Dean of the Teachers' College of Columbia University; John Dewey, Professor of Philosophy in the University of Chicago; H. Morse Stephens, Professor of Modern History of Cornell University; James W. Bright, Professor of English Philology in Johns Hopkins University; Liberty Hyde Bailey, Professor of Horticulture in Cornell University; and Albert S. Cooke, Professor of the English Language in Yale University.

Instruction will be offered in philosophy, education, history, Latin, Greek, physics, chemistry, botany, mathematics, and other departments. A short course for farmers is being planned, in which practical instruction will be given in horticulture, irrigation, dairy husbandry, stock breeding, etc. The gymnasium will be open, and summer students may exercise there, or may choose courses in the theory of physical culture.

Though last summer was the first time the University of California had ever made a summer session an organic part of the University, nevertheless the attendance was the third largest in the country, the total number of students, 433, being exceeded only by Harvard's 987 and Cornell's 445. University of California is now exceeded in number of undergraduates and graduate students only by Harvard, and in total number of students ranks fifth among American Universities.

President Hazard of Wellesley College announced last month that gifts of money aggregating more than $100,000 had been received from women whose names are withheld at the request of the donors. The sum of $50,000 is given outright to endow the Kimball professorship of art. A gift of $5,000 toward a gymnasium has been received. The interest on $50,000 will be paid to President Hazard at her pleasure to endow the chair of Biblical history and literature.

The international committee on Olympian games has decided to hold the next meet in 1904 in the United States. Probably the games will be held either in New York or Chicago.

Oxford-Cambridge Football.

The great Cambridge-Oxford football match of Dec. 12, 1900, writes a correspondent of the Hartford Courant, is said to have been one of the best exhibitions of "Rugby" ever seen in London. To American eyes it presented a spectacle both interesting and novel. There were the familiar goal posts and cross bars. Most of our lines were missing from the field, only five, besides the boundaries surviving. There were perhaps 6,000 spectators in attendance, quiet and orderly; no flags, no songs, no yells. Presently the rival teams enter and are greeted with faint applause. There are fifteen men on each side, dressed in jersey, running trousers, golf stockings, and heavy shoes. Knees are unprotected. A few wear light bandages protecting the ears, but there are no pads or nose-guards.

The ball is kicked off in the American fashion, but thereafter when "put in play" it is tossed between two struggling squads of "forwards" (our rush lines) who try either to drive it along the ground by sheer strength, or to "heel it out" backward, where it is seized and passed to the runners. There is nothing like our interference, that sort of thing being contrary to rule. Moreover the necessity, that he who tackles a runner should both down his man and prevent the passing of the ball, robs the process of the deadly precision so dear to American enthusiasts. The punting is something beautiful, the ball being kicked down the field and out of the side lines with wonderful accuracy. The Englishmen are clumsy and inefficient in falling on the ball. They do not like to lie on the ground.

For half an hour the teams surge up and down the field, neither side scoring, though Cambridge seems to have the best of it. Now one of the players is injured and carried off the field, but his comrades must do without him, for there can be no substitutes. During the intermission the players stroll about the ground, seemingly in no distress whatever, and in five minutes the battle is on for another half hour. In the next fifteen minutes Cambridge with her great clumsy strength forces two touchdowns. One of them results in a goal and the score is 8 to 0. And now the scene grows homelike. Gone is the stolid British reserve. Hats, canes, umbrellas, and overcoats are in the air. The crowd is yelling furiously, "Cambridge, Cambridge,"—"Oxford, Oxford," in a curious singing cry not at all like the explosive jar of the American college yell.

Soon Oxford rallies and scores a touchdown by a most complicated and beautiful series of passes. This English game is certainly more picturesque than the close American style. A goal is kicked and the score is 8 to 5. Cambridge is sure Oxford cannot do it again and feels that the game is still safe. But then comes a most sensational and unexpected finish. Out of the straggling crowd the ball rolls slowly toward the Cambridge goal, just where no Cambridge man can reach it. An Oxford man is suddenly materialized out of nothing. He picks up the ball, staggers for an instant, and is on his feet sprinting desperately with a clear field before him. There is a touchdown and a goal. Only seconds remain to play and Oxford has won 10 to 8. The whistle blows and instantly the crowd is silent and reserved again. People go quietly home.

Golf at Princeton.

The class of '86 of Princeton University has offered to build a golf club house on the new links of the University in honor of Lamar, the famous athlete. The house is to cost about $20,000.

As Princeton is to have one of the best college courses next season the gift of the house in question is most opportune. The members of the class of '86 will, in consideration of their generosity, be made life members of the golf club, and will make the club house their headquarters when visiting Princeton.

The classification by the Harvard Crimson of 15,138 conspicuous Americans whose names appear in Appleton's Encyclopedia of American Biography, (as to the proportion of college and non-college graduates), shows the following result.

	College Graduates.	From Academies.	Non College.	Percentage of College Men.

Professor Kitchel, of the Yale Greek Department, has been placed in charge of a new branch of work at Yale known as the Department of Self-Help. He will have regular office hours during which he will see any students who desire information as to how they may find ways of self-support while in college. This department will be in co-operation with many of the business men of New Haven who are likely to be able to assist students.

The University of Michigan has just received the de Criscio collection of 250 Latin inscriptions, most of which are on slabs of marble. Forty years of research were required by Signor Giuseppe Criscio, the parish priest of Pozzuoli, Italy, to build up this magnificent collection. Its archaeological value is inestimable.

A consignment of physical apparatus, valued at several hundred dollars, has been received by the department of physics from Richard Muller-Uri of Biunswick, Germany. The consignment contains a number of X ray instruments.

The University of Chicago is going to erect three new gymnasium buildings. For the erection of the first, a gift of $125,000 has been received.
